1. The opportunity

Your clients pay you to drive traffic. Almost all of that traffic leaves anonymous, and the client never knows the campaign worked beyond a clicks chart. Visitor identification fixes that, and right now almost no agency offers it as a productized service. The agencies that move first get two things: proof their campaigns pull real people, and a recurring revenue line that does not depend on billable hours.

What you sell your client

"We will show you the actual companies and people your campaigns bring to your site, scored against your ideal customer, delivered into your CRM every morning." That sentence closes retainers.

2. Two ways to run it

Reporting layer (any paid plan)

Install OSPRY on client sites, tie named visitors back to each campaign, and put real people in your monthly report instead of click counts. Works on Starter and up.

Your own product (Agency plan)

The full logged-in product, rebranded as yours: your logos, your colors, your product name, your email sender, and a custom domain with managed TLS. Your clients sign in to your tool. Manage every client from one console with sub-accounts, an "Act as" view, and per-client usage and billing. OSPRY appears nowhere.

3. The money, worked out

You pay Legion wholesale: $500 a month flat plus 27¢ per identified lead and 15¢ per enrichment from one pooled wallet. You charge your clients retail through your own Stripe, at whatever price you set. The spread is yours. An illustration, with retail prices you control:

	Illustrative	Notes
Clients on your white-label	8	Mid-size agency book
Your retail price per client	$299/mo + 60¢/lead	You set both numbers
Client leads per month (avg)	300	Varies with traffic
Your monthly retail revenue	$3,832	$8 \times ($299 + 300 \times 60¢)$
Your wholesale cost	$1,148	$$500 + 2,400 \text{ leads} \times 27¢$
Your monthly margin	$2,684	~70% on the service line

	Illustrative	Notes

Illustrative only; your retail pricing, client count, and traffic will set the real number. The structure is the point: flat wholesale, pooled usage, retail you control.

4. Why your clients say yes

- Proof of work. Named visitors tied to each campaign. The retainer conversation changes when the report has people in it.
- Speed. One snippet per client site, live in minutes, consent platform included so their legal team stays calm.
- It feeds what you already manage. Identified people route into the client's HubSpot, Salesforce, Slack, Klaviyo, or sequencer, the stack you probably set up for them.
- Honesty that protects you. Person-level is US-only and we say so. Consent gates everything. You are never the agency that sold something sketchy.

5. Getting started

1. Take the $1 trial on your own agency site first. Watch your own pipeline fill; sell from experience.
2. Pick two clients with real US traffic and run the reporting layer for a month.
3. Move to the Agency plan, brand it, set your retail, and roll it across the book.
